STAMFORD PUBLIC EDUCATION FOUNDATION ANNOUNCES NEW CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER

STAMFORD, CT—March 22, 2022—The Stamford Public Education Foundation’s Board of Directors today announced Lindsay Wyman has been named Chief Executive Officer for the non-profit organization. Ms. Wyman brings a combination of leadership, passion for equity in education, and a deep commitment to the organization’s mission and vision.

“I am thrilled to be taking on this new role at SPEF. We have a truly dedicated team that works tirelessly for our students and families in Stamford. An equitable, quality public education is the right of each and every child, and we will maintain that as our priority as we continue our crucial work in the Stamford community. I am honored to lead us into our next phase,” said SPEF’s new CEO, Lindsay Wyman.

Ms. Wyman has served as SPEF’s Director of Programming since September 2018. In this role, she has successfully led her team in delivering educational programs and solutions that promote equitable access to quality public education in Stamford. Prior to joining the SPEF team, Ms. Wyman was a literacy consultant on a national level at LitLife, Inc., working in public and private schools nationwide to advise and revamp their literacy programs. During her career in education, Ms. Wyman also worked at King School in Stamford, where she developed and oversaw the implementation of curriculum for grades K-5 as the Director of Teaching and Learning, and at Eagle Hill School in Greenwich, where she held positions as a literacy teacher to children with learning disabilities and served as both a Department Head for the Literature Department and a Lower School Advisor.

“On behalf of SPEF’s Board of Directors, I welcome Lindsay into her new role as CEO. Under Lindsay’s leadership, I am confident SPEF will continue down its successful path of promoting equity in education and delivering programs that prepare Stamford students to thrive,” said Michael Zanga, President of SPEF’s Board of Directors.
